Chapter 441: The Creation of The Arks

The Vision of The Arks

As the Godverse continued to evolve, Sung Jin-Woo's creativity and power knew no bounds. After his victory against the Void Monarch, he turned his attention to expanding the grandeur of his domain. The Godverse was already a masterpiece—a realm beyond the omniverse, filled with celestial wonders, eternal battlefields, and the luminous God Tree. Yet, he desired to craft something new, something monumental that would not only add to the aesthetic splendor of the Godverse but also serve as a testament to his absolute dominion.

Thus, the idea of The Arks was born.

The Birth of The Planetary Starships

With a wave of his hand, Sung Jin-Woo summoned the infinite resources of the Godverse, bending the laws of creation to his will. From the depths of the Ethereal Forge, a structure he conjured specifically for this project, the first Ark began to take shape.

Each Ark was a marvel of engineering and divine power, forged from materials found only within the Godverse:

1. Celestial Aetherium: A metal imbued with divine energy, unbreakable and radiant.

2. Void Crystals: Remnants of the Void Monarch, used to power the starships’ cores.

3. Godflame Alloy: A fusion of celestial fire and primordial darkness, granting the hulls both resilience and beauty.

These Arks, each as vast as Planet Earth, were adorned with intricate designs of silver and gold, their surfaces shimmering with ethereal light. Towers, domes, and spires rose from their surfaces, resembling celestial cities floating in the void.

At the heart of each Ark was a Celestial Core, a living energy source created by Sung Jin-Woo himself. These cores pulsed with power, capable of propelling the starships across realms or unleashing devastating attacks if necessary.

Aesthetic and Functionality

Though primarily intended as decorations, The Arks were fully functional. Each one was equipped with:

Interdimensional Engines: Allowing them to travel between realms in an instant.

Planetary Defense Systems: Shields and weaponry capable of obliterating even archangel-level threats.

Self-Sustaining Ecosystems: Entire biospheres within the starships, complete with rivers, mountains, forests, and artificial suns.

Command Centers: Operated by angelic emissaries, ready to deploy on Sung Jin-Woo's command.

The interiors of the Arks were designed to mirror the splendor of the Godverse itself. Each deck was a masterpiece of architecture, with grand halls, celestial gardens, and vast libraries containing the accumulated knowledge of the multiverse.

Deployment and Purpose

Once hundreds of Arks were completed, Sung Jin-Woo stationed them throughout the Godverse, their massive forms orbiting the God Tree and other celestial landmarks. Their presence added a new layer of magnificence to the already breathtaking realm, their golden hulls reflecting the light of the eternal stars.

Despite their beauty, the Arks were more than mere decorations. They served as:

1. A Symbol of Power: A reminder to all who gazed upon the Godverse of Sung Jin-Woo's unmatched might and creativity.

2. A Line of Defense: Though rarely needed, the Arks could be deployed in an instant to repel any threat from beyond the omniverse.

3. A Home for Emissaries: Each Ark housed countless emissaries, their armies, and their followers, ensuring they were always ready to act.

The Ceremony of Completion

Once the final Ark was completed, Sung Jin-Woo gathered his creations—angels, dark angels, apostles, shadowkins, and more—for a grand ceremony. The skies of the Godverse were filled with the radiant wings of his subjects as they gazed upon the fleet of starships, their awe and reverence palpable.

With a simple gesture, Sung Jin-Woo activated the Arks, their cores glowing with divine light as they came to life. The sound of their engines hummed through the Godverse, a symphony of power and perfection.

"These are The Arks," Sung Jin-Woo declared, his voice resonating across the realms. "They are both a testament to the boundless potential of creation and a reminder of the strength that protects this domain. Let them stand as symbols of our unity and power."

The crowd erupted in cheers, their voices echoing across the Godverse as they knelt before their creator.

To Be Continued...

The Arks, now a permanent part of the Godverse, stood as both a monument to Sung Jin-Woo’s creativity and a potential weapon against any future threats. Their presence added a new layer of grandeur to his realm, solidifying his status as the Absolute One, the supreme deity of creation and destruction.